WGI's vision is to be a corporation where diverse individuals realize their full potential; respected for expertise, skill, and the ability to master innovative technologies.

We instill this concept in our everyday walk within WGI. We continuously seek ways to grow not just ourselves, but to spread our knowledge to the kids of tomorrow.

Our latest venue was at Longfellow Academy. Faye Wilkins and Deborah Johnson attended a full day of activities to discuss the future. Faye spoke to 6th graders from an entrepreneur standpoint so that they can envision a dream of ownership and not just being an intriguing part of a corporation. They were very inquisitive but wanted to know all of her valuables and just how rich was she! Pertinent questions about what it took and steps that they need to take into consideration were also addressed, but it was clearly understood that they value the mighty dollar! Deborah spoke to the 7th graders about working for a small business vs. a large corporation and its advantages. She played the games "How well do you know one another" and "Perception" for gifts and got full participation from the students as well as the teacher. The students fully understood the message behind the game and learned more about themselves. Through events such as this, we can reach the thought process of the children and build upon their dream.
